7. Julius Caesar and Achilles

58a. —	58b.Achilla was soon killed [268]	58c.Achilles was soon killed (see above)
59a.Belisarius was	59b.Julius Caesar was charged with hunger for regal power and betrayal [268]	59c.Achilles was	59d. Valerius was charged with		charged with	charged with hunger for regal		hunger for re-	hunger for regal power and be-		gal power and	power and betrayal (see		betrayal (see	trayal (see above)		above)	above)

To 59b: Plutarch: Caesar's hunger for regal power aroused sheer hatred for him and led to attempts on his life. Caesar's principal blame was just in that for the people ... Those who were talking Caesar into accepting the power circulated the rumour among the people ... [268]. Allegedly, against his own will, Caesar turned out to be very close to "regal power" (ibid.). Like Belisarius and Valerius = Volusius, Caesar strove to demonstrate the falseness of all these charges, and publicly rejected the title of king, which was given to him by his partisans (ibid.). However, this did not calm the Romans, and the displeasure with him grew ([268*], V. 2, pp. 485-486).

60a.Allegedly promising to grab Italian crown, Belisarius rejected charges (see above)	by many Ro-	60c. — 60d. Valerius publicly rejected charges (see above)
61a.Belisarius with- drew from war and was called away from Italy (see above)	Julius Caesar and his charges
62a. —	62b.Conspiracy against Caesar	62c.Conspiracy 62d. — against Achilles
63a Belisarius' dis- grace, his arrest, trial, confisca- tion of posses- sions and subse- quent death [268]	Caesar, who was stabbed	treacherous mur- ble disfavour, der, who was since he died in